

ADVANCE RESEARCH GROUP BULLETIN, Vol. II, No. 4, June 1971, Honolulu, Hawaii.

THE ATOMIC WILDERNESS - Albert Schweitzer, Senator Wayne Morse, Pope Pius, are voices crying in the atomic wilderness when they plead for an end to the atom bomb testing program. Few in positions of power will listen. Only a year ago Democratic candidate Adlai Stevenson made the stopping of the atom bomb tests an issue in the presidential campaign, and you know who won! President Eisenhower was better at reading the mood of the majority of the American people. In April, 1954 the measure of that mood, according to the Gallup poll, was that 71% of the people wanted the government to go ahead with the tests!

THE WISE GREEK, PLATO - "Barren times" is the way the Greek philosopher Plato would characterize these cheerless days. According to H.P. Blavatsky, in Isis Unveiled, Vol. I, p. 247, Plato divided the cycles of mankind into fertile and barren periods. He observed that during the barren periods the spiritual sight of man is so blinded by materialism as to lose every notion of the superior powers of its own divine spirit. The divine intellect in man is veiled; only his animal brain philosophizes. Blavatsky thought, in 1880, that we had reached the bottom of the hard-hearted cycle. She should see the spectacle of American madmen, the best products of the best universities, using the best brains and the best equipment, to build the fastest planes to carry the biggest bombs to kill the most people in the shortest possible time. Never has the slogan, America First, had more meaning than it has today!

A WISE GENERAL? - Maybe General Omar Bradley is a student of Plato. Anyhow, in the April, 1953 "Newsletter" Bradley is quoted as saying: "With the monstrous weapons man already has, humanity is in danger of being trapped in this world by its moral adolescents. We have too many men of science, too few of God. We have grasped the mystery of the atom and rejected the Sermon on the Mount. Man is stumbling blindly through a spiritual darkness while toying with the precarious secrets of life and death. The world has achieved brilliance without wisdom, power without conscience. Ours is a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants. We know more about killing than we know about living. This is our twentieth century's claim to distinction and progress." (Credit Meade Layne for quote.)

THE COMING OF THE GUARDIANS - It is just because our leaders are a bunch of moral adolescents, for the most part, that we need outside help. I believe we are getting it. If you don't you would do well to read "The Coming Of The Guardians." I see Meade Layne, head of Borderland Science Research Associates, 3516 Adams Ave., San Diego 16, Calif. is about to release his masterpiece again, for $4.00 a copy. "The Coming Of The Guardians" is the one volume which tackles the 4-dimensional, now-you-see-them-now-you-don't, problem of the Flying Saucers head on from the latest scientific point of view - metaphysical! Though when Meade first published the book metaphysics was still in the scientific doghouse. Buy a copy, read it, sleep on it, meditate on it, and stretch your mind and heart until they can comprehend not only Flying Saucers but also the Golden Rule. If you can live that principle by which the Guardians of our planet live, perhaps you'll qualify to travel in outer space company!

ANOTHER INVADER BITES THE - Speaking of Guardians, looks to me like they took protective action for us against an intruder from outer space, March 17. A flaming fireball crashed into the Chugach mountains of Alaska on that day. This particular UFO flashed across the Metanet's valley at 6:30 p.m. A black column of smoke rose from the mountainside for fifteen minutes after the crash. This news item was in the April issue of Gribble's APRG Reporter. On page 52 of my copy of Meade Layne's "Coming Of The Guardians," one of the Guardians refers briefly to one of the problems of Guardianship: "Visitors from other solar systems occasionally come to this one for various purposes. If their purpose is not malicious, they are permitted to proceed. Otherwise they are usually intercepted and turned back in the outer limits of the solar system." What happens to would-be trouble makers who aren't intercepted and turned back? I suspect that the Alaska incident is one example, countless others may go unsuspected or unobserved by mankind. Remember the gigantic spaceship which blew up over Norton, Kansas, Feb. 18, 1948. This occurred at an altitude of 30 miles, according to H.T. Wilkins' report, and the roar was heard in six states! A photograph of the cloud of debris is in Palmer's Coming of the Saucers.

MID-AIR EXPLOSIONS OF PLANES - In the last bulletin, April 7, I conjectured that malicious entities might be laying invisible aerial mines in the paths of some of our airplanes, causing many of the fiery explosions reported. Trevor James touches on this in his "Spacemen, Friends or Foes." The Rev. Marc Norman, head of the Universal Fellowship, 1928 Oak Bay Drive, Victoria, B.C. Canada, asked his space contact if this were true. This was at a regular Wednesday night meeting in April. The contact, who identifies himself as Antrim, of the Interplanetary Space Patrol Services, explained that "many of these crashes, and planes disintegrating in the air, are caused by an 'atomic field' formed by radioactive particles bunching together in our atmosphere. . . . Some of these invisible clouds (atomic garbage from our bomb testing program) are anchored by polarized rays from the core of the earth and tend to act as a net to any innocent aircraft entering the area. . . . As a plane enters this field its fuel can be ignited and the plane explode without warning. . . . Other planes, touching only the edge of the field, may have an engine stopped." According to Norman the duty of Antrim and his crew is to eliminate these fields as they are located, using the green fireball. Seeing that the bomb testing program is the work of the Atomic Energy Commission and the Department of Defense, and seeing that the AEC and DOD are supported by our taxes, can there really be any innocent planes or passengers in the air over America?

THE ARRED-ROWLAND COMET - Well, it came and it went, and as usual the astronomers contradicted themselves all over the place, showing that they are educated guessers at best. I didn't take its coming as seriously as I should have until the Honolulu Star-Bulletin carried an Associated Press dispatch from Columbus, Ohio, April 30, quoting Ohio State Univ. astronomers as saying the comet had lost part of its tail! These scientists were tracking it with the school's radio-telescope. This 20th Century device indicated that a section of the comet's tail millions of miles long had broken off April 20 and was headed in the general direction of the earth's orbit! "The tail should miss the earth by a considerable distance," Dr. John B. Kraus reported, "but even if the earth were to pass through it, we might not notice it."

Perhaps not directly, Dr. Kraus, but what about the residual effect? The angle at which our orbit intersects the comet's tail may be such that we'll be days or weeks in passing through. How many million tons of cosmic dust will our atmosphere pick up? And what or how will that react with the millions of tons of charged particles thrown into the outer atmosphere by our atom bomb testing program?

CATASTROPHE - Could some of this highly charged material have caused the thousand forest fires which broke out in New England the first week of May? Or was that merely a preview of things to come? Some astronomers estimated that the earth wouldn't enter the comet's tail's orbit until September or October. Of course all the residual effects wouldn't necessarily be harmful. For instance, Typhoon Trixie, building up 540 miles northwest of Guam on May 11, suddenly dissipated. Its huge vortex dribbled harmlessly away. And the farmers in the former drought stricken areas of Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas can be thankful for the abundance of water that recently came their way - that is, those whose farms, buildings and live stock weren't washed away in the floods! Or blown away by the tornadoes.

MANLY PALMER HALL - The dean of metaphysicians lectured on the Arendt-Rowland comet in Los Angeles, April 28. His lecture was titled: The Effects of the New Comet on the Affairs of Nations and Individuals. What a pity that members of his Philosophical Research Society cannot or will not make recordings or ~~make~~ notes available to the public. I have one friend in Honolulu who was fortunate enough to hear him that Sunday. She sat, practically open mouthed for an hour and a half, while Mr. Hall talked. He walks out to the center of the Vermont theater stage, sits in the one chair available, and the interminable stream of wisdom and knowledge rolls out, without benefit of notes or visual aids. About all my friend can remember is that the comet will bring a crisis in personal and national, and international, affairs this year. How each person and nation reacts to this new force depends on his capacity for, or resistance to, change.

THE INTERNATIONAL BANKERS - A reader questioned the influence of bankers over members of Congress. In the last issue I mentioned how bankers from various states blocked a probe of the Federal Reserve System tight money policy by coming to Washington and urging congressmen to vote down such a proposal put forward by Rep. Wright Patman, Texas. The influence of bankers is obvious enough when you realize that they hold mortgages on the homes and businesses of congressmen back in their home states. The father of international banking knew this principle of control only too well. Meyer Amschel Rothschild said: "Permit me to issue and control the money of a nation and I care not who makes its laws!"

THE INVESTIGATION - To answer the few outspoken critics of the tight money policy there will be an investigation. The money managers have selected a millionaire, Senator Harry Byrd of Virginia. Financial writers characterize him as a "sound money" man. In their terminology this means that Senator Byrd is in favor of a huge public debt by which private bankers control public credit in their own interests, and also that interest-bearing bank notes circulate in place of legal money. You can be sure that Byrd will remain true to his class and conduct a white wash investigation.

A DEN OF THIEVES - In his interesting book on international banking, Citadels of Chaos, C.C.Veith quotes President Andrew Jackson as saying to a group of bankers of his day: "You are a den of vipers and thieves. I intend to rout you out, and by the eternal God I will rout you out!" Jackson was saddened and disgusted by the open scenes of corruption in Congress. He estimated that the Bank of the United States had "loaned to members of Congress and to subsidized presses at least one-half million dollars." Nicholas Biddle, top banker of his time, held Senator Daniel Webster's personal notes for thousands of dollars. Congressmen were openly encouraged to borrow big advances against their pay vouchers. The Bank of the United States was the Federal Reserve System of its day. Its charter came up for renewal in 1836 and Jackson campaigned for his second term of office on the promise not to renew the charter. In spite of the bankers' control of the press and much of Congress, such was Jackson's popularity with the people that he won and carried out his promise. So, until the Civil War the nation was free of public debt.

THE PUBLIC DEBT - The $275 billion dollar monster we carry on our backs today was born in 1863 when the bankers' lobby again bribed a National Bank charter bill through Congress. Under the pressure of the war and the badgering of the bankers, President Lincoln reluctantly signed the bill into law. Perhaps the term international banker will have more meaning to you now when I tell you that the Rothschilds, controlling the Bank of England, encouraged the southern states to go to war by offering them unlimited credit to buy munitions. These financial harpies hoped to split the United States in two, thus making the states easier to manipulate as sources of wealth and power. Failing that because of Lincoln, they did get their bank charter bill through Congress and by the war's end, 1865, our ancestors were again in hock to the bankers to the tune of $4 billion. A Bank of England man was at Jefferson Davis' right hand during the life of the Confederate government. He was Judah Benjamin, rebel Secretary of State from 1862 to 65. While Lee was surrendering to Grant at Appomattox, Judas deserted the rebel government and fled to Florida. There, paddling off the coast in a rowboat, he was picked up by a British ship and taken safely to London.

TOO MUCH MONEY - International bankers encourage wars by making credit cheap. Then when the contending nations are mortgaged to the hilt, the bankers squeeze credit off to stop the fighting, and to collect the profits. To do this excess credit has to be pulled in again before people begin lending the easy money around among themselves, by-passing the banks. The bankers accomplished this after the Civil War by favoring legislation, and assured its passage by getting a popular hero elected president, a person ignorant of international finance, General Grant. In his second term he signed the bankers' bill which demonetized silver, shrinking the currency base, making the nation more dependent on banker controlled credit. There really were some hair-curling depressions after that was done in 1873. The bankers were faced with the same problem after World War II. Again the king-makers groomed a popular hero for the presidency. As soon as he was in office in 1953, and safely surrounded by "sound Money" men, the Federal Reserve Board raised the price of credit. Screams of protest went up all over the country, from businessmen and from Republican politicians. "Did the Federal Reserve Board want the Republican Party saddled with another Hoover depression?" Well, not right away, so the credit screws were loosened for three years, until the spring of 1956. This time, with the screamers silenced by profits, and the propaganda mills in high gear, the screws were tightened again. They'll stay tightened regardless of how many needed homes and schools go unbuilt for lack of credit. Of course the weapons developing and testing programs will never lack for money!

UNDERSTANDING - I hope this brief discursion into high finance will help you to understand what is going on in Washington today. The men who put President Eisenhower in office will do anything to keep the power which control of money confers in our civilization. When he approved of the Federal Reserve Board's tight money policy last year he had served his purpose as far as they were concerned. That is why the men who pleaded with him to run for office, and to run again, are turning on him now. He is no longer useful. This is the same organized greed which backs the "silence group" Keyhoe speaks of. This is the same ruthless power which hires the "man in black" referred to by Barker. An invasion from outer space is a threat to that power. Space men may not willingly subject themselves to the kind of war-boom-depression control the international bankers have accustomed us to. For the message from outer space is one of Brotherhood, and that word is anathema to men whose god is money.
